F.R.C.C. Golf Notes

Time is running out for those F.R.C.C. members who have not registered for the Captain's Choice Golf Tournament scheduled for April 8 and 9. If you have not signed up, contact the pro shop (352-7037) immediately and request that your name be entered on the book.

You are also reminded that an entry blank for the 1978 Invitational is included in your March statement. If you plan to participate in this event, you should complete and mail the entry form to J. Richard Guill, Rt. 2, Box 498, Appomattox, Va. 24522. Do not put this off because invitaitons will be mailed to non-members about the first week in April and only 120 entries will be accepted. Members may request that the entry fee be billed by so stating on the entry blank. Members who for some reason did not receive a statement in March, can call Dick at 352-8436.

With the recent warm weather many golfers have begun spring practice and should remember to post all scores on the handicap sheet in the locker room. handicap cards are desired for many of our tournaments and are required for some area tournaments and all state tournaments.

A reminder, too, that the course will be crowded at times this summer and courtesy, good judgement and common sense will help avoid accidents.

HAPPINESS IS 4-H

By Frank H. Sweet
Extension Agent

4-H Meats Team practices will be held on the following afternoons at the Extension Office beginning at 3:30 PM.: Tuesday, April 4; Thursday, April 6; Tuesday, April 11; Wednesday, April 12; and Thursday, April 13. 4-H'ers who are interested in the meats program are invited to attend the workshop sessions.

• • •

Senior 4-H'ers will need to plan to give their demonstrations or illustrated talks on Tuesday evening, April 4, at 7:00 P.M. in the Extension Office. Members who cannot be there on Tuesday evening need to make arrangements to give their presentations earlier. This will be a practice session for seniors.

• • •

All Senior 4-H'ers planning to take part in District Contests should have completed an eligibility form by Wednesday, April 5.

• • •

Eleven 4-H'ers and two chaperones from Adams County, Nebraska will be visiting Appomattox this summer. We are still looking for possible host families for this group. If your family is interested, please let us know.

• • •

Adult volunteer leaders are a constant need for our 4-H program in Appomattox. Currently there are three community 4-H clubs that are in need of organizational leaders and project leaders. Please let us know if you're interested, or know of anyone who may help. Volunteers add much to the 4-H program.

• • •

The Theme for this year's June Dairy Product Contest is "Pull for Milk." This program, sponsored by the American Dairy Association, provides an understanding of the importance of milk and milk products. Posters should be 14" x 22" and will be due in the Extension Office the last of May.

The Cults and the Kids

Why is it that "cults"—from the Krishna Consciousness movement to the Unification Church, from the Divine Light Mission to the Love Family—have been booming in America?

Dr. James Gordon, a research psychiatrist of the National Institute of Mental Health's Center for Studies of Child and Family Mental Health, discusses "The Kids and the Cults" in a recent issue of Children Today, a DHEW publication. His report presents the viewpoints of protesting parents and of the young people themselves, based on his experience as "participant-observer" of the new religious cults for some 18 months.

Many anthropologists and historians think that religious cults thrive in times of social and cultural crises and in eras when local or global destruction seems possible. Gordon believes that the present day is "just such a time."

Earlier, when Gordon was studying the effects of the Vietnam war, he was surprised at how often conversations kept veering to the threat of world destruction. Vietnam destruction was televised (the first televised war in history), and the young folk believed the same weapons might be turned on them. The outcome of the Vietnam war showed that America was not militarily invincible, and the question of America's moral authority also was raised. The young people turned to opposition—to the antiwar movement and to a counterculture which turned away from this country's major institutions: schools, families, churches, professions, and businesses. They sought to create a social system and a world view apart from these institutions.

Parents were seen as inadequate and constraining; schools were viewed as irrelevant and oppressive, and the goals of a career and material success were looked upon as hollow.

Then the Vietnam war ended and the antiwar movement evaporated. There was nothing, the young people felt, to take its place. They began to feel disillusioned about their own collective action and, without allegiance to a guiding set of principles, they became increasingly private and withdrawn.

The religious cults seemed miraculously to meet their needs; their private longings were somehow fulfilled and their isolation ended if they joined a group. The cults gave them an unerring map, or so it seemed. If such a map to a complex world had something wrong with it, they did not see it or chose to ignore it.

What were they searching for? Gordon sums up his findings as the search for transcendent experience; the search for family, leadership, and authority; the need for community; and an overriding sense of mission.

Gordon calls for "a deep and respectful understanding of the needs the young people have, of the religious experiences they seek, and of the limited alternatives available to them in our society."

For a copy of Dr. Gordon's report, write to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402 for publication (OHD) 77-33014: price. $1.00.

What Is Depression?—Part I

Feeling low, blue, down in the dumps? It's not a pleasant feeling. It usually means we've been hurt or disappointed or saddened by something in our lives that leaves us feeling confused and listless for a little while. It happens to everyone. There is even a word in music called the blues—a low, mournful, often wailing sound to express these universal human feelings.

Depression is another name for this mood. Feeling depressed is a normal and natural response to experiences of loss, failure, or bad luck anyone might suffer.

In some cases, however, depression becomes something more than just normal feelings of blues or letdown. A large number of people—perhaps millions in the United States—suffer from what psychiatrists and psychologists call "depressive illness." Depressive illness is more intense and lasts longer than common down-in-the-dumps feelings. Sometimes a serious bout of depression can begin ordinarily enough with an event like the loss of a loved one or a change of job. But the depression sometimes persists and becomes worse. Many times in very severe cases there doesn't seem to have been any circumstance serious enough to have caused the depression.

Researchers are not sure, even today, whether depressive illness is an aggravated form of normal depression or whether it is something entirely different. Some patients have described their feelings during a depressive illness as quite distinct from any blue feelings they had ever experienced.

Depression can show itself in many ways and with different degrees of intensity. There are a variety of possible symptoms, particularly in the milder forms of the illness called depressive neuroses. Often those who go to their physicians with general complaints or feelings of "not being myself" don't know that depression may be causing these feelings.

In next week's column we will discuss what friends and family can do to help a person with the more moderate forms of depression. If you would like further information about depression—the types of depression, causes, research, and treatments—write for, Learning About Depressive Illnesses, National Institute of Mental Health, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, MD 20857

"I've had a breast removed."

"That's what the woman from Reach to Recovery said to me after my own mastectomy. I asked her which one. I couldn't tell by looking. Mostly I couldn't believe I'd ever look that good, or feel so right again.

But I do. You can see for yourself.

"Reach to Recovery is a special volunteer corps of women who have all had surgery for breast cancer. The woman who came to visit me showed me how to do special exercises. She gave me a booklet that had answers to more questions than I'd thought to ask.

"And more than that, she helped me realize I was still me. She helped give me the confidence to get on the road again—the road to recovery."
